Introduction

In March 2010, President Barack Obama signed into law the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA), the most far-reaching health reform legislation since the federal government enacted Medicare and Medicaid in 1965.

The ACA authorizes more than $22 billion to support local innovation that tackles the big questions of how to sustain and improve America's health care system by transforming how health care is paid for and delivered to patients. This investment in experimentation focuses on initiatives that improve health care quality, reduce costs, build the health care workforce, diminish ethnic and racial disparities, and promote transparency. Over one hundred demonstration projects, pilot programs, and grants target funding to local health care providers and non-profit organizations, state and local governments, and public/private partnerships.

The health care reform law's decentralized approach to innovation puts power and responsibility into the hands of doctors, nurses, patients, employers, and other community and state leaders who are most affected by the problems that health reform is working to solve. Many projects incentivize multi-stakeholder partnerships between government and local health care leaders so each can learn from the other about what is feasible given budgetary, personnel, and other constraints. All of these initiatives will test new ideas at the local level and gather evidence about successful models that could improve quality, efficiency, and cost-effectiveness on a broader scale. The aim is to generate solutions that can be replicated by other states and medical providers across the country.

Promising initiatives include:

- Building the health care workforce to include teams of doctors, nurse practitioners, and community health workers who help patients navigate the medical system and access high quality, culturally-appropriate care. (For example, see Sec. 5507, Demonstration projects to address health professions workforce needs).
- Improving the delivery of primary and preventive care in an integrated system where personal doctors, specialists, and hospitals can easily share patient information while taking mutual responsibility for helping patients to achieve better health outcomes. (For example, see Sec. 2706, Pediatric ACO Demonstration).
- Assisting businesses to create workplace-based programs that help employees with chronic health issues to stay healthy and active, and to catch health problems before they escalate. (For example, see Sec. 10408, Grants for small businesses to provide comprehensive workplace wellness programs).
- Building a more effective and transparent system to track and identify doctors and hospitals that are doing a good job delivering high quality care, as well as those that could make improvements. (For example, see Sec. 3013, Grants to Develop Quality Measures, and Sec. 3015, Data Collection and Public Reporting).

- Transforming the medical malpractice system to promote better communication, reduce medical errors, and curb the practice of “defensive” medicine. (For example, see Sec. 10607, Medical Malpractice Demonstration).

The federal government has already released grant announcements and Requests for Proposals for many of the ACA’s funding opportunities. Others will become available in the coming months and years. The due dates on many applications require quick action, so local health care leaders should be prepared in advance if they seek to apply for a particular project.

How to use this report

The goal of this report is to help state and local leaders to identify funding opportunities by providing a comprehensive list of the grants, pilot projects, and demonstrations that were included in the ACA. The report lists relevant information about each opportunity, such as the amount of authorized funding, implementation dates, data reporting requirements, and other details about the project or program. Where the government has released a solicitation or other information about a particular grant, this report highlights relevant details and includes a link to the grant announcement or document explaining the details of the opportunity.

Each grant, pilot, and demonstration is presented under the Title, Subtitle, and Section number where it appears in the ACA. Grants for which the due dates have already passed are designated in red, while grants with pending due dates at this time this report was published appear in green. Some sections of the law lay the groundwork for multiple grants, such as Sec. 4002, the Prevention and Public Health Fund. Please note that sections that have already produced one or more grants with past due dates (marked in red) may generate one or more grants in the future. The Center for Health Law and Economics will update this report every four to six months to help state and local leaders to track funding opportunities over time.
